Summary of FL1–109 Proposal Feedback

The feedback, apparently gathered through the Academic Senate, supports the case for DSPS proctoring space but has real reservations about using FL1–109 for it.

In favor of FL1–109: It's right next to the Center for Excellence and the overflow room (FL1–107), holds about 15 students, and has good line of sight. Only one class is currently scheduled there, and it's easy to reach from transit. Respondents also judged it better than FL1–107, as both rooms are set up now, for student experience and academic integrity.

Against it: FL1–109 is the campus's only ITV room. It has three cameras, live streaming for online students, instant lecture recording, four monitors and student microphones. People from every constituency have used it. The equipment can't be moved to another room, and replicating it elsewhere would be too expensive, so repurposing the room means losing that capability.

Other points raised:

- FL1–107 as an alternative would need blinds, soundproofing and a new layout to fix line of sight. Even though it's larger, proctoring rules cap how many students can test there at once. It's also busy at peak times, and DSPS's priority there apparently isn't holding on T/Th mornings.
- The need is long-standing and growing. Faculty and staff have asked for dedicated DSPS proctoring space for years. With DSPS enrollment rising, some see FL1–109 as only a temporary fix because of its size.
- Equity concern: moving T/Th morning proctoring to Fridays forces T/Th students to come in on extra days to take exams.
- Longer-term idea: plan permanent, properly sized DSPS proctoring space as part of the bookstore repurposing.
- ITV staffing: administration says running classes the way Prof. Thompson does, with a Media Services staff member assisting, is too expensive.
- Pending item: LRCFT has asked for the letter saying FLC could lose funding if DSPS space isn't brought into compliance. The Senate will share it once it arrives.
